Body Double is a series of events that explores presence, virtuality, and transference through works by artists Xavier Cha, Tyler Coburn, beck haberstroh, and Ian Hatcher. This project is organized by Nicole Kaack in partnership with Dunes (Portland, ME), Miriam (Brooklyn, NY), and Parent Company (Brooklyn, NY).

The series draws its title from the term for an actor that operates as a surrogate for another individual, one who is more prominently credited with playing the same part. The body double is selected for their superficial physical likeness to the acknowledged performer. However, for the purposes of the audience, this secondary actor does not exist. The body double navigates the set, the screen, the stage seen by us, yet not recognized. When we gaze at that back, torso, or arm, assuming that this anatomy is connected to a known face, who is it that we see?

The works presented in the series are adapted from projects previously presented in other years and contexts. Like the subjects they address—psychic projection, surveillance, dramaturgy, and deepfakes—the second lives of these works are troubled by questions of originality and immediacy. “Performance” can indicate theatrical drama, yet also suggests the achievement of a task, subsisting at once in the realms of the mimetic and the actual. Although the works in Body Double sidestep performance—turning instead to the workshop and audition—the projects are nonetheless in dialogue with, and, even, about this form, suggesting participatory expansions that nonetheless wear away the contours of reality.

An actor walks into the camera's frame, and they become someone else. For the duration of their performance, they inhabit a new persona that collides memory, empathic imaginaries, and socially constructed behavior. In Audition—in which the audience is invited to watch the trial that precedes selection for a role—Xavier Cha focuses our attention on the craft and material of acting, allowing us to see many interpretations of the same role in quick succession and emphasizing the changes of affect that signal that the actor is playing a part. This performance is an adaptation of a work originally performed at the de la Cruz Collection, Miami, in 2011.

Artist Biography

Xavier Cha's performance-based works and videos grapple with architectures of subjectivity, illusions of agency, and what it means to be human with a physical body within racial/techno capitalism. Attuned to ways in which the body is watched and conveyed, immersed within heightened circuits of surveillance, marketing, voyeurism, and self-spectatorship, Cha examines how mediating frames—screens, sets, algorithms, and the omnipotent lens of the camera—shape behaviors and comfort within the body. Recent solo exhibitions have been presented by Commonwealth and Council, Los Angeles (2019); Empty Gallery, Hong Kong (2018); 47 Canal, New York (2015, 2012); and The Whitney Museum of American Art, New York (2011). They have staged performances at venues, including the Brooklyn Academy of Music, New York (2017); Zacheta National Gallery of Art, Warsaw (2017); Kunsthalle Düsseldorf, Düsseldorf (2014); and the New Museum, New York (2013). Cha has been awarded the Harkness/BAM Dance Residency (2017), Frieze Film Commission (2015), Guggenheim Fellowship (2014), and New York Foundation for the Arts Fellowship (2012). They received a B.F.A. from the Rhode Island School of Design and an M.F.A. from UCLA. xaviercha.com

Audition: By appointment for applicants; audition process open to a public audience

Location: Miriam, 319 Bedford Ave, Brooklyn, NY

Format: Live performance, video

Project Description: In Audition, Xavier Cha opens the audition process to a public audience, focusing our attention on the craft and material of acting, allowing us to see many interpretations of the same role in quick succession, and emphasizing the changes of affect that signal that the actor is playing a part.

Call: Xavier Cha and Miriam Gallery seek performers to audition for two roles, described below. Auditions will be no more than 15 minutes apiece and will be open to the public. During the audition, actors will perform a one-minute screen test, to be incorporated into a video installation that will be on view at Miriam from June 8–July 29, 2023.

Compensation: $50 per audition; auditions no more than 15 minutes in length

Roles

1. The camera is shooting over your shoulder as you stare at your reflection in a mirror, moving through expressions of inquiry, doubt, and searching, ending with a look of dejection. You make an attempt to pull yourself together, mustering a sense of composure and donning a mask of confidence.

Extrasensory perceptual techniques have persisted across the ages, mobilized by systems of belief spanning the Spiritualist seances of the 1800s and the automatic writing of the twentieth century artistic avant-garde. Even after the Second World War, long past the dawn of science, the telepathic potential of the human mind continued to be tested and harnessed—if for more agnostic pursuits. Psychics did not peer into the beyond but rather into enemy territories, transgressing the bounds of body and state in search of clandestine intelligence. Like the Surrealists before them, these telepathic spies cast their minds like nets, while their bodies—stationary yet receptive, dumb yet impressionable—eked out information in inscrutable sketches and impassive assemblages of clay.

Engaging this paranormal tradition, Tyler Coburn and Ian Hatcher will lead two workshops that instruct participants in the technique of remote viewing, a form of psychic espionage developed by the U.S. government during the Cold War. Over the course of each workshop, participants will be introduced to this psychic methodology and led through a viewing.

Remote Viewer was originally commissioned by Theater Rampe and Künstlerhaus Stuttgart in 2017. In 2018, it was presented at Triangle Arts Association, New York.

Generative AI companies rely on datasets that contain billions of photographs collected from across the internet. These photographs are of people—perhaps of you, or I, or people we love—many of whom will never know that their likenesses are included in these datasets and being used to generate images, videos, or filters for selfies. Confronting the vast scale of big data, beck haberstroh's workshop We are already gathered models alternative ways of counting, congregating, and identifying one another.

Engaging the formats of masquerade, open-ended group brainstorm, and social contract, this workshop aims to transform data back into lived relationships and explore what happens when we reclaim these alienated representations of ourselves. Impossibly, it attempts to heal and reconfigure our relationship to our corresponding data, virtual communities, agency, and sense of trust.

We are already gathered is rooted in the following principles for facial belonging. If these terms and conditions cannot be met, then haberstroh holds that the dataset should not exist. Everyone whose image is contained within a dataset will: know of and consent to their presence in the dataset; know of and consent to the uses of the dataset; be invited to participate in conversations around the use of the dataset; be invited to meet and form community with the others whose images are contained within the dataset; be invited to visit the facilities where their image is stored; be given an estimate of the environmental costs of the long-term storage of their image and asked to consent to this; be given a report on the working conditions of human laborers interacting with their image and asked to consent to this; be contacted by researchers using their image to discuss the emotional, social, technical, and historical implications of the presence of their image within the dataset; be credited and compensated for the use of their image; be given agency to rescind their consent to any of the above at any time.
